Before Francis Jennings published The Invasion of America: Indians, Colonialism, and the Cant of Conquest twenty-five years ago (1975), few students of the American frontier knew Francis Jennings. Francis Fritz Jennings (1918 – November 17, 2000) was an American historian, best known for his work on the history of the United States. Jennings was born in Iowa and attended the University of North Carolina. Jennings published The Invasion of America: Indians, Colonialism, and the Cant of Conquest in 1975, which has become a seminal work in the study of American history. Jennings' work has been praised for its detailed and nuanced examination of the ways in which European colonization shaped the development of the United States. Jennings began his career as a journalist and later became a professor at the University of North Carolina. Jennings' work has been recognized with numerous awards, including the National Book Award. Jennings' other works include The Creation of America: Through Revolution to Empire, which was published in 2000. Jennings was married to Joan Woollcott. Francis Jennings died on November 17, 2000, at the age of 82. Jennings' legacy continues to be felt in the field of American history, and his work remains a cornerstone of the study of the early American frontier.
